E. DANA JOHNSON.

This is not an ordinary notice. It is, however, a sad farewell. E. Dana Johnson, for several years past editor of The Evening Herald and for ten years past connected with the Albuquerque newspapers in various editorial capacities, leaves today to become the editor of the New Mexican at Santa Fe. Mr. Johnson is a newspaper writer of the first water. His work is strong, thorough and with the original touch of the master hand, and his work has gone far toward making the Albuquerque newspapers with which he has been associated recognized throughout the country as first rate newspapers.

Mr. Johnson's departure from Albuquerque is a distinct loss to The Evening Herald and to its large family of readers and friends. Santa Fe and the New Mexican are to be congratulated upon their success in securing his services.

And while we of Albuquerque say, "Prove to look upon Santa Fe as a somewhat smaller field, we are glad that Mr. Johnson is to remain in New Mexico. It is certain that his work will do much to add to the joy of living in the state capital just as it has in Albuquerque. His associates on this newspaper and his hosts of friends wish him luck.

A NOTABLE OCCASION.

Tomorrow the University of New Mexico celebrates the twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding. The occasion is being made a memorable one, and the University of New Mexico has just reason to celebrate.

Starting a university in New Mexico was not an easy matter. For many years the head of the state educational system was hardly more than a high school. It has passed through many vicissitudes through lean years, fighting for adequate maintenance, it has suffered from fire and has faced endless disbursements; but in spite of all it has never gone backward, its ideals have been constantly growing higher, its courses of study have been growing stronger, its equipment has been improving and extending; its teaching force has been steadily raised in standard and efficiency, and its enrollment has always increased—slowly but surely, it has been blessed with earnest, honest, conscientious, high-minded, hard-working executives and faculty, who have given the best that is in them for the betterment of the institution and in the effort to give New Mexico a real university, a university worthy of the name, a school wherein the young men and women of the southwest may receive the proper training for efficient and noble life-work.

If the University had done nothing else, it has the gratifying consciousness that during a quarter of a century it has exercised a strong, wise, some and uplifting influence upon its city and state and upon the cause of education. What it has accomplished against great odds is something of which the state may be proud. But the best proof of the University's real achievement is the fact that its graduate are now filling positions of trust and responsibility at home and abroad; that it has sent out hundreds of men and women trained to duty, allegiance to highest ideals, who are making good in the best sense of the word, who are making solid and useful citizens.

The University of New Mexico has done well. The people of Albuquerque and of New Mexico will join in heartfelt enthusiasm and sincerity in the spirit of this celebration and in fervent wishes for a glorious future for the school.

We are just beginning to realize what has been done at the University for the betterment of men and women and the advancement of true progress in the Sunshine state, and to realize what a tremendous asset this institution is to the city of Albuquerque. Long may the University grow and prosper; may its efforts toward proper and sufficient state support be crowned with success and may its highest ideals be realized.

The men and women who are making it a power for education may rest assured that their efforts are appreciated by the people and that they will always have the heartiest cooperation from the people of the state.

In working the University in deep and truth a school for all the state and school which will rank among the best in the west.

THE ARTILLERY OF HEAVEN.

If, in case Mexico is not previously invaded by some foreign nation, the Mexican aerial fleet materials, the fleet of Lookout monoplane will increase the prestige of the "Heaven Above the Clouds." When Villa, Oregon, and Arizona sweep down upon Mexico City, a fleet of twelve monoplanes and two biplanes will be commanded by Admiral Grinnell Pollock, an American who for two years was the personal chauffeur and automobile maid of the late President Francisco Madero, and his salary will be $1,000 per annum.

The monoplanes are to carry and drop bombs and will be used for aerial photographic work. The biplanes in addition to dropping bombs will be equipped with one eight-shape gun each and have control of a short-radius wireless for communication with the relief camps upon the mainland. Each machine will carry two persons—the aviator and an officer of the naval artillery who will manipulate the gun, drop bombs, make photographs of maps and sketch the position of the enemy.

Pollock's "flagship" is the Dyott monoplane invented and built by the man from whom he learned the art of aerial navigation and his fleet at present consists of five flying machines—two biplanes and three monoplanes—the remainder to be supplied at once by Dyott.

But Huerta is said to be prepared to meet the "wings" and has several aeroplanes already in Mexico, while he has sent three aviation experts from the Mexican army to Europe to complete his fleet by purchase.

Mr. Johnson's departure from Albuquerque is a distinct loss to The Evening Herald and to its large family of readers and friends. Santa Fe and the New Mexican are to be congratulated upon their success in securing his services.

And while we of Albuquerque say, "Prove to look upon Santa Fe as a somewhat smaller field, we are glad that Mr. Johnson is to remain in New Mexico. It is certain that his work will do much to add to the joy of living in the state capital just as it has in Albuquerque. His associates on this newspaper and his hosts of friends wish him luck.

WIDOWS LIVE LONG.

News comes from Knoxville, Tenn., of the death of "Parson" Brownlow's widow, at the age of 95. Few people knew that until so lately there remained this living link with the famous "fighting parson" of war times, whom Tennessee expelled because of his bold attacks upon secession, but afterward reigned to be its governor.

For how many widows of distinguished men have survived their husbands so long that they have seemed to train phantoms of history through the living realities of a later generation?

AND NOW the lungs has been converted into a life preserver. A Pennsylvania butcher was accidentally locked inside of his meat refrigerator and to save himself from freezing to death danced the tango for four hours. Surely this was a case of the end justifying the means.
